A VERY BAD DOG IN CHURCH. A dog, supposed to be mad, created a papic in a well-filled Catholic Church Sunday afternoon. The society of the Holy Rosary of St. James's Church, New Bowery and James street, held its regular weekly meeting in the church Sunday afternoon. Father McDonald, assistant pastor of the church, presided. The meeting was eventful until about 3:45 o'clock, when a dog, frothing at the mouth, pushed open the swinging the mouth, pushed open the swinging doors of the front entrance of the church and started up the centre aisle. It swayed from side to side as it ran, barking and snarling. The first person to notice the dog when it entered the church was a Mrs. Sullivan, of Cherry street. She gave vent to a pious exclamation in so loud a voice that the choir, which was singing at the time, stopped short. The dog stopped short, too, looked at Mrs. Sullivan a moment in a frightened way, and then resumed its march toward the altar.

All eyes were on the animal by this time, and the cry of "Mad dog" was shouted all over the church. The noise frightened the dog the more. It made a snap at Mrs. Manny's dress. Mrs. Manny gave a scream, as did every one else in her vicinity. The people climbed over the pews to get to the back of the church. The dog by this time had nearly reached the altar

The twenty little altar boys, clad in long vestments, scurried toward a far corner of the church. Father McDonald, who had been kneeling in front of the altar, moved to one side. At that moment the dog leaped over the altar railing. It ran up the steps leading to the altar platform, and crouched down and looked at the frightened congrega tion. Foam was dripping from its

Every one in the church was intent to see what the dog would do. It did nothing, It sat still and panted. The dog showed no inclination to move, and assistant sexton Charles Bension advanced toward it. When he got within a few feet of the altar the dog sprang toward him. Bension stepped to one side and the dog jumped the altar railing and ran toward the frightened con-gregation. As the dog approached the people they made a rush for the door and elbowed their way out to the street. The dog darted in and out among the pews for a few seconds, and then ran back to the altar platform. No one cared to disturb it this time.

But Bension had left the church through a side door and was running to the Oak street police station. He told the sergeant what had happened, and Policeman Heffinan was sent to the church. At the church door he met Policeman Britt, who had heard of the trouble. They went up the middle aisle with their revolvers and billies ready to use if necessary. There were about fifty persons left in the church at this time who had decided to stay and see what would happen.

When the policemen reached the altar railing they stopped and raised their revolvers ready to shoot. Father McDonald interfered and said that the dog should not be shot in the church. The policemen lowered their pistols and after a few moments' argument with the priest decided to catch the dog. They chased him from the altar and into the vestry, where they closed the door on him. There they got two long sticks and a rope, and after a little more trouble they caught him.—
